As a firm that's spent the last 20 years on the cutting edge of mass-tort litigation, the attorneys at Weitz & Luxenberg are well aware that one of the major keys to representing clients individually lies squarely in client service. The firm, which is a leader in the current Vioxx, Bextra and Celebrex litigations against some of the country's most powerful pharmaceutical companies, responds to each and every query a client may have, from basic questions to the most critical matters. "Handling thousands of cases, individually, is an immense responsibility as well as a logistical challenge which we successfully meet by providing a well-appreciated human touch at each stage of the complicated litigation process," says Arthur Luxenberg.

With an impressive roster of Super Lawyers — acclaimed senior partner Perry Weitz, managing partner Arthur Luxenberg and partner/chief trial attorney Robert Gordon — and 55 attorneys in several offices around the country, the firm has built its reputation on dazzling

"We find ourselves fortunate to have the opportunity of practicing law at its highest level for America's most vulnerable citizens as well as furthering ambitious philanthropic and social initiatives."

courtroom wins complete with impressive multimillion-dollar verdicts. But the three attorneys won't belie the incredible amount of legwork that goes into each case. "Merck isn't just going to throw money at you," says Mr. Weitz. "They know that when we litigate a case, we've spared no expense, have found the best experts and are ready to go the distance." Indeed, says Mr. Gordon. "We also take great pride in our track record of negotiating the highest settlements in the country."

Weitz & Luxenberg's work goes far beyond pharmaceutical cases, however, and is just as adept at handling catastrophic injury and medical malpractice cases as it is in dealing with drug companies. It is one of the top firms in the nation in asbestos litigation, with over 35,000 clients nationwide, and is also leading the way in toxic- and environmental-tort cases. That's not even to mention the firm's pro bono work and its considerable involvement in charity work for countless non-profit organizations, schools and charities — especially those addressing hunger.

But regardless of the litigation, Mr. Luxenberg knows that his team is driven by satisfaction and results. "I can't really vocalize what kind of pride we take in the knowledge that we are continually advancing the rights of injured victims," says Mr. Luxenberg. "It's a serious responsibility and one that we embrace wholeheartedly."
